

Miami's luxe Aston Martin building tops off. A year from done but almost sold out

BY REBECCA SAN JUAN

DECEMBER 03, 2021 2:31 PM

Aston Martin Residences, pictured above, topped off. ASTON MARTIN RESIDENCES

The makers of James Bond's car reached new heights with the topping off of its first residential tower in Downtown Miami.

The 66-story condominium Aston Martin Residences completed its highest floor at 300 Biscayne Blvd. Way, according to a statement from the luxury car brand and project's developer. Eighty percent of the 391-unit high-rise is sold out, with completion slated for late 2022.

Aston Martin Lagonda and Argentine developer G&G Business Developments launched the project in 2016, scooping up the 1.25-acre riverfront for $125 million in 2014. It was the highest sale for a property at the time.

Units range from a two-bedroom, two-and-a-half-bathroom space spanning about 1,100 square feet for approximately $2 million to a four-bedroom, four-and-a-half-bathroom condo unit stretching across 3,300 square feet and priced at about $4 million. Besides the keys to their new condo, buyers receive an Aston Martin SUV, worth about $176,900, or 2020 Aston Martin DB11, worth for $205,600.

Aston Martin Residences

Aston Martin Residences serves up more than the usual amenities like a pool and spa — including a private superyacht marina, art gallery and 24/7 butler service.

Residents will be living in the second tallest building in Miami, according to data from the Chicago-based nonprofit Council on Tall Buildings and Urban Habitat, which focuses on the future of cities and urban growth. The all-residential Aston Martin scales up to 817 feet, behind the nearby residential and office tower Panorama Tower that reaches 867 feet including the tip of the building.